Since 1760

Above the main house, an inscription reads “Año de 1760.” At that time, estates in the region were cattle ranches. During the henequen boom, the “green gold” that made Yucatán one of the world’s great fiber producers, Yaxkukul was a henequen hacienda. Agrarian records from 1920 and 1937 list it alongside its neighbors Chunkanán and Kampepén.

A private cenote, already built out

Turquoise water beneath a vault of stalactites. The cenote already has tropical-hardwood platforms, a spiral stair wrapped in woven vine and a viewing deck with benches. It sits a short walk from the hacienda's main buildings.

26 sinkholes. And we have barely started exploring.

The LiDAR flight measures the ground beneath the forest canopy. It found 26 karst depressions; the deepest matches Cenote El Ingenio. Five others are deeper than 3.5 m and may be caves or cenotes yet to be explored.
